“A big mistake people often make on their applications is talking about their background without applying it to the job. You can't just brag about things you've done without explaining what your achievements demonstrate or how they are relevant.”

“It's very important to have hands-on work experience – legal experience, but also things like waitressing, working in a charity shop, or a summer camp. Being good technically is a given, but a lot of being a lawyer is the ability to get along with people from a broad spectrum of society, so life experience is important alongside your academic qualifications.”
